NCLR Accomplishments

Awarded a total of $4,000 in scholarships to community college students in honor of outstanding support for libraries and learning resources services by administrators.

Represented NCLR on the Commission on Academic, Student and Community Development and the Commission on Emerging Trends, Research, and Technology of the AACCC.

Nominated candidates for the AACCC Governing Board elections – Past NCLR Chair served on the AACCC Governing Board.

Presented successful programs at the AACCC Annual Conferences, covering recent topics such as “Who owns Faculty Research: Intellectual Property, Copyright and the 21st Century Publishing” and “One Book, One College.”

Sent a NCLR speaker to the Community College Baccalaureate Association Conference.

Sponsored discussion sessions at both the Midwinter and Annual meetings of the American Library Association.

NATIONAL COUNCIL FOR LEARNING RESOURCES

An affiliate council of the American Association of Community Colleges

The purpose of the National Council for Learning Resources (NCLR) is to contribute to the mission of the community college through activities which relate to Learning Resources programs and which will improve educational programs in community colleges.

National Council for Learning Resources

An affiliated Council of the American Association of Community Colleges

The National Council for Learning Resources (NCLR) is your voice in the American College Association of Community Colleges. This is the only official representation of libraries and learning resources in the AACC organization.

NCLR is composed of library/learning resources leaders who have an interest in the mission and future directions of learning resources programs nationwide.

Your personal or institutional membership is needed to support the purposes of the NCLR:

- To provide a member forum and voice within AACC for learning resource topics and concerns.
- To highlight exemplary practices in learning resources programs at the AACC Annual Conference.
- To direct programming toward community college administrators and faculty other than library staff. No more preaching to the choir!
- To address the concerns of our profession to the faculty and administrators of our colleges.

NCLR business is conducted primarily through mailings, phone calls, faxes, e-mail and discussion group meetings at ALA. Meeting attendance at AACC is not required: only officers attend AACC meetings. The program we sponsor at the AACC conference is designed primarily for the executive administrators of our colleges.

Your individual or institutional membership to NCLR gives you a voice in the only professional library organization which speaks directly to key administrators in two-year colleges. Your support enables NCLR to have a unique impact on the way learning resources programs are viewed and funded on the national level.

NCLR Activities

- Publish the NCLR Newsletter for Presidents (2-3 issues per year). Your institutional membership entitles you to three copies of the Newsletter, for you to share with your local campus administrators.
- Select a recipient for the NCLR Administrative Leadership Award. This award is given to a community college administrator who has shown significant support for libraries and learning resources programs. A plaque is presented to the recipient and a $500 scholarship is given to the recipients institution in his/her name. This is the ONLY award in community college leadership, which goes directly back to the award winner's college through a student scholarship.
- Sponsor an informational program for administrators at the AACC annual conference.
- Participate in AACC governance, advisory groups, and committees to represent community college library and learning resources programs.
- Liaison with other AACC affiliate organizations.
